

About the U.S.-China Working Group

The U.S.-China Working Group seeks to build diplomatic relations with China and to make the Congress more aware of U.S.-China issues.

Much of this century's history will be written between Washington and Beijing. To protect American interests and avoid future conflict, the bipartisan U.S.-China Working Group works to establish a primary diplomatic relationship with China.

The U.S.-China Working Group believes it is vital for Congress to increase its dialogue and engage a working relationship with the Chinese. The group will host monthly meetings to hear from key business, academic and political leaders about U.S.-China issues ranging from trade and economic policy to space exploration.

Working Group members will work closely with the State Department, congressional leadership, academic community and key business leaders to develop a comprehensive strategy for the 21st century.
